Reading Difficulties Risk Screener Adoption Toolkit

Screening students for risk of reading difficulties, including dyslexia, is one of many tools that educators can employ to gain information about how to support their students' learning. Screening should be considered part of a school's comprehensive instructional strategy and should be used by educators like other types of formative and summative assessments: to inform instruction, measure a student's progress, identify student learning needs, and enable parents and educators to discuss student needs in a more informed way. Screening results shall be used as a flag for potential risk of reading difficulties and to provide supports and services. Screening is for all students to determine risk, and who needs additional assessment and early intervention.

The purpose of the Reading Difficulties Risk Screener (RDRS) is to:

- Ensure early identification and intervention with evidence-based early literacy instructional strategies and materials improves literacy outcomes for students.

- Use as part of a broader process that evaluates student needs and progress.

- Inform individualized instruction, measure a student's progress, identify learning needs, and enable parents and educators to discuss needs in an informed way.

- Provide assessments for both English-speaking and non-English speaking students in their primary language if assessments in those languages are available.

Join us to learn more about the RDRS and process for adopting a screener for your district!
