Introduction to Oracy and Cross-Language Connections

Join us for an interactive and research-based workshop designed specifically for dual language educators! This session will explore the critical role of oracy — the oral skills students need to interact with and respond to text — as a foundation for effective biliteracy instruction. Participants will dive into the latest research and learn engaging classroom strategies that promote student discourse. Additionally, participants will explore ways to intentionally and strategically build cross-language connections to deepen students' understanding and promote transfer between languages.

In this session you will:

- Explore the research that supports oracy as a key component of biliteracy development.
- Explore strategic ways to make connections between both program languages.
- Leave with practical strategies and planning tools you can apply right away in your classroom.
